Georgetown University has a portrait of Eleanor Darnall, the mother of Archbishop Carroll of Baltimore and of Eleanor Carroll, who married William Brent of Richland, and Anne, who married Robert Brent of Woodstock.

Of Archbishop Carroll several portraits are in existence. Georgetown University has a portrait by Stuart, presented to that institution by Judge Ord. Another portrait, by Nagle, is in the possession of Mrs. Henry B. Goodfellow, and a third, by Paul, has been reproduced by an excellent engraving. St. Memin also made a crayon portrait and engraving of Daniel Carroll Brent of Richland. A miniature of this gentleman is in the possession of Mr. Douglas Simms, of Georgetown.

A miniature of Robert Carroll Brent, the last owner of the Woodstock place, is understood to be in the possession of Mrs. Dr. Lewis, of Alexandria.

Several very fine early portraits of the Digges family are in possession of descendants of that family. One of these, that of Sir Dudley Digges Master of the Rolls, is by Van Dyck, and another by Sir Joshua Reynolds.

An excellent portrait of Daniel Carroll of Duddington, by Healy, is owned by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Burritt of Washington.

Portraits of Robert Brent and his wife Susannah (Seymour of Bermuda) were in possession of the family of Col. William Brent, but were stolen from their house many years ago.

THE BROOKE FAMILY.

As the publication of that part of the Brooke genealogy which was due to the minute and comprehensive investigation of Professor St. George T. Brooke, has been concluded, it has been thought that the continuing instalments could not begin better than by giving a condensed genealogy of the family, with references to volumes and pages of the Magazine, which contain Professor Brookes' notices of the various individuals.

The pedigree here given will give few details, but along with each name will appear, in parentheses, the references to the various portions of the already published accounts, which gives wills, dates and various details.
